World Savings Defender

As a former employee of World Savings for 24 years, I must wholeheartedly defend the Sandler's against allegations surrounding the 60 Minutes story line. The Sandler's spent a lifetime building an ethical and highly regarded financial institution with only the best of intentions not only for their employees, but most importantly for our customers. Having transparency in all transactions with full disclosure was standard business practice intended to always do right by each customer. To imply otherwise is simply wrong. The sad thing in all of this is that the legacy that the Sandler's spent so much time in nurturing and building over many years is now being tarnished by someone with an axe to grind. Where is the gatekeeper for ethical journalism?
